

Hidden Reflections

I have been lucky enough to spend four months in the country of Spain, mainly Barcelona. Even luckier, I have been able to learn through incomparable experiences of cities, people and cultures. The worldliness learned through physical steps of travel is something that cannot be seen just on our phones through others but instead through the lenses of our own experiences.

This image comes from the The Baths of Doña María de Padilla of the Alcazar in Sevilla, another place I visited while I traveled Spain. The reflections in the water show just how much history exists between the walls of the Palace. None of these things can be seen through just the picture, but instead gain meaning when they can be lived in real life. I hope we all get the chance to experience life through travel.
